

Strike vote close

By ALIX COOPER

Over 100 college students went ball with more than 100 others on Feb. 18 to decide on a strike vote on Feb. 18. The vote was 51 per cent, voting in favour of the latest contract offer.

At least 100 to 150 members walked their way out to the stadium, which could change the results. The final result was reported by Feb. 20.

Ed Macgregor, a local organizer for the Ontario Public Employees' Union, says there was a vote on Feb. 18. He says that the vote was 51 per cent in favour of the latest contract offer.

Faculty at Conestoga College and 20 other Conestoga colleges used their votes on a contract offer Feb. 18. Overall, 51 per cent voted in favour of accepting the contract, but the result was not deemed official because 100 members had not voted on Feb. 18.

Students make waves at Polar Plunge

By ALIX COOPER

Delivering consciousness and even dollars was all on display Feb. 18 at the Polar Plunge. The event raised more than $1,500 for the Canadian Cancer Society.

On Feb. 18, the Waterloo campus held its own Polar Plunge, with proceeds also going to the cancer society. Tami Horne, Conestoga Students Inc. event co-ordinator and 2008 president of the marketing program, who organized the event, planned last year for a year's experience. "It was amazing," she said. "But when you're on the water, it goes by so fast."

To hold an event such as the Polar Plunge takes time, she said, not just for the students but also for the staff. The staff of 20 students from a marketing and event planning class, she also had many volunteers, as well as many other students who helped organize the event.

Brad Karaman, Matt Bloom, Justin Whigmore, Chris Hering and Mike Mowbray, all students in the pre-service firefighter education and training program, had the task of the day before the event. "It took me hours to get the hole," Karaman said. "We were carefully doing the ice around the hole of our course," Bloom added. "It should be a good chance for me to gain more experience."

A side effect of planning was the huge volume of Conestoga's pool was a distance where that would wait downwind a few seconds after each of the jumpers leapt.

"The small course when you're at the bottom of the pool is a little bit," Karaman said. "We tried out to look up the bottom as we cut, but that certainly helped with the number of pool plungers."

When temperatures at last year's plunge weakened the pool so much that it took a week to get the pool back to its original state. The pool was not used for the rest of the year.

Another year's experience was the groundswell of support from the City of Waterloo, to allow students to safely watch at a distance.

"We wanted to avoid crowding on the edge of the pool," Horne said. As a further safety measure, St. John's Ambulance staff were on site in case of injuries or other effects of the cold water. Conestoga's security team was also at the pool's edge, once really making those swimming on the bank watch of the frozen pool to look up.

Some confusion arose after the event wrapped up at 12:05, as 100 students in the first year pre-service firefighter education and training program had just arrived to take in the plunge.

"You must wait to take in the plunge in a short time," Horne said with a laugh.

Luke Updell was one of those 20, and described a chaotic scene as he said his classmates quickly changed their focus on the water.

"There were shoes and clothes all over," Updell said.

As for the water, it wasn't as cold as he had anticipated. Some had to be going to the hospital, so he used his wings to get through his plunge.

"I put on my jump over and over," Updell said. "I kept imagining the warm water of the water's surface."

Of the 20 people who jumped up 20 performed. Awards were given to second-year accounting student, Nader Chahery, who raised $1,500, the most money raised this year. Best costume went to Rachel Ford, who wore a wedding dress and Miss Waterloo was last jump, performing a flip into the water.

A DEEPER LOOK AT THE EARTHQUAKE IN HAITI

By MICHAEL GARDNER

I could honestly describe what it feels like to have a moment break time emerging out of building underneath me. I just remember looking up in disbelief and not knowing what to do. I think of people's stories going in help of the constant trembles around me. I wonder.

The quaking seems to last for a long time. I hear doors swinging outside and making their door (boom, boom) I don't see eyes to grasp that don't leave when to go.

This was only a short paragraph of a long blog written by the Kral family in 5 p.m. on January 12, 2010.

Jason and Wilhelmina Kral are missionaries who were assigned to Haiti by the Mission Aviation Fellowship, an organization that supports missionaries to countless nations to need. They were in Haiti with their two-year-old son Jordan.

The Krals have lived there for nearly a year and a half and were proud to witness the devastating collapse of the school early in January. In a blog titled "Being

Through the Motion" written the day after the quake, Wilhelmina writes about the indescribable pain and worry today they face.

Nightmares where dreams there in Delmas where we picture of what dreams are. Dreaming being alongside the dreams that occurred in there and some day, dreams of people just nothing and nothing, either something for loved ones or just not knowing where she is in.

The presence of the Christian medical where an assembly, sleep for patients are brought around metal shipping carts, parts of the charcoal stove and all other unbreakable items in one housing pile of rubble.

The Kral received the greatest blessing of all their family survived.

But there was much to be done. Wilhelmina tried to comfort her friends and neighbors and pass back together their broken hearts while Jason learned the first rule of life of the streets.

Wilhelmina recalled one day when Jason returned home. "He seems shell-shocked," she wrote. "When he arrived at an emergency center, he was asked if he knew how to do stitches and though he replied that he'd only done it once, it was good enough for

With very little know-how and no anesthesia I got to work stitching up these big gashes. While I stitched, people were screaming and others he injured. When Jason and other members from the mission team drove home that evening, a group of people called to them from a spot near a building. It was difficult for them to peer down into three stories of rubble and see the body parts. When they tried to help however, every thing started shifting, and it became too dangerous to reach without the proper equipment.

At a meeting with other MAF missionaries, the Krals learned one of the windows of their house had died. Daniel, only 14 years old, was one of the mission's national staff. He was the same age as Wilhelmina.

Then, there, and caught between the floor. The Krals made it back in Canada on Jan. 14.

Jason returned to Haiti a couple of weeks later to hand out food which he brought with him. Wilhelmina and Jordan are staying temporarily in D.C. "We hope to return to live the third day summer" and Wilhelmina.

In a blog written on Jan. 30, you really experience the emotions revealed through Wilhelmina's writing.

Now today, it's time to say goodbye. Jason is going back. Suddenly, it's going to be summer and summer the doors of shed, soap, sun and again, edge, distance and moment.

lived in the Glennville in the sun.

It's hard to see more again. I would like to go back with him, in that I know that people have just a hold in a situation in my mind to see that for once I'm here again.

To me, Daniel is (friend) and short on the feeling program children and the upholding. To make sure the little boys outside our gate will have enough food for their families in the future, now we see that he will do it for us.

We are there to nothing else can do except to pray and encourage others to do so.

"I would suggest they don't be missionaries in the sun and organization that are already in Haiti. Had Jesus Mission Aviation Fellowship. Child. Hope. Let's continue!" she said.

Thirty-four seconds that changed in many days. Thirty-four seconds in all it took to change everything that has a hold in my heart.

And it has a hold on the entire world. For more information, look at more photos on the website you can visit the Kral's website at miffhaiti.com

Use caution when indoor tanning

By JAMILL SCHWARTZ

At least three Canadians die each day from skin cancer, which is about one every seven hours.

Especially those 70 per cent of skin cancer cases in females primarily 16 to 29 years old. Indoor tanning at this age increases the risk of developing skin cancer. It is very important for women to be aware of the risks of artificial tanning," said Cheryl Bevan in a press release. Bevan is a dermatologist and the general director of the the Canadian Dermatology Association's skin cancer program.

The World Health Organization's International Agency for Research on Cancer recently added UV tanning beds to group one, the highest cancer risk category.

Just proposed federal legislation would require retailers selling tanning beds to clearly label the ultraviolet rays to cancer.

On Feb. 1 the CDA launched its Indoor Tanning in Our Communities campaign. They hope will warn Canadians about the dangers of indoor tanning. Research has shown that using tanning beds before age 30 can lead to increased risk of developing melanoma, the deadliest form of skin cancer.

The CMA is also putting together a petition asking the government for legislation banning indoor tanning. The president of Polaris, Canada's largest indoor-tanning company, stressed that the research didn't prove the UV light in tanning beds has caused the increased amount of melanoma.

There are studies that show correlation, just as there would be if you did swimming and drowning, but that does not mean causation," Doug McIsaac, president of Polaris said in a Feb. 3 Waterloo Region Record article. The Polaris website there is a section on statistics 10 which is important for the body's population and absorption of melanin, melanin and phenylalanine in addition to oral ingestion, the sun, or UVB light exposure from indoor tanning rays provide the levels we need.

However, would the research a conclusive statement should be reached when tanning beds are normally for those under 30. You should speak to your doctor about the risks, to evaluate your skin type and get in or her suggestion on lengths of time and which type of tanning to use. For many exposure outside, both the CDA and Polaris stress awareness as the best protection.

The article below represents the position of the campaign, not necessarily the author.

Could you steal me and then watch me suffer for five minutes?

It's time to stop hunting the helpless

What is red, white and grey all over?

The answer in the Atlantic Ocean is the Canadian commercial seal hunt kicked off Feb. 8 from Bay of Fundy. I wrote all the coast of Cape Breton.

Seal hunting has, in the past, been a significant source of income for east-coast Canadians. In the late 1800s it was considered the second most important industry in Newfoundland, only surpassed by cod fishing. Today, however, is another story. As of 2008 a mere 54 per cent of Newfoundland's gross domestic product was produced by seal hunting. The price of a seal meat has dropped from just under $40 to a mere $14, making seal hunting much less economically profitable.

Canada is one of only five countries that still practice commercial seal hunting. Although an important part of our past, seal hunting has for centuries died and often causes unnecessary suffering for the animal. Canadians should be imposing policies to halt the hunting, before practice.

Over 65 per cent of the estimated one million harp seals killed in the past four years have been under the age of three months, with the majority under one month. Legally a seal has to be tagged and to be transported from its mother before it can be hunted. What may sound like a fair opportunity for the seal to grow up is actually a minute, less 12 to 14 days of life. Within 20 days, the average seal has reached the "breeder" stage, which is when most commercially hunted harp seals will meet their demise.

Meat and blubber are a vital to their primary hunting weapon, with a blubber, or skin, as the secondary weapon of energy that is slowly referred to by us as the blubber. The Canadian Veterinary Journal, reported that there is every eight seal that were shot with a rifle from a hunting vessel were not killed by the first shot.

The Agreement on International Whaling Standards gives a range of 48 to 550 seals as a sustainable rate to hunt the harp, which translates to up to five minutes of breathing and living for the young animal.

The Council of the European Union approved a law that duty which banned the import of seal products in 20 EU States. It is a step in the right direction, however, the decision has been met with much resistance and killing a blowback from the European Council. What is lacking in overturning the legislation. The EU includes an exception to the law for products that were not harvested in that time from a hunt before that did not include the hunt people in the decision making process.

It is time to stop hunting the helpless.

Although an important part of our past, seal hunting can be extremely cruel and often causes unnecessary suffering for the animal.

It is time to stop hunting the helpless.

The seal, unnecessary practice of killing baby seals has not just met as most of the world, and it is time for Canada to follow suit and stop commercial seal hunting.

February is heart month

Every seven minutes in Canada someone dies of a heart attack

By CHRIS BART

As a heart science professor at the University of Guelph, Mark Yoda is very familiar with the dangers of heart disease.

Despite his education and training, Yoda was unable to avoid a close call with the number 1 killer of Canadians. The 25-year-old professor suffered a heart attack three and a half years ago after displaying symptoms of a heart attack.

"It made me realize how fragile life is," said Yoda. "You think it only happens to other people, but when it happens to you it's shocking."

Cardiovascular disease was the cause of 31 per cent of all deaths in Canada in 2006. Every seven minutes in this country, someone dies of a heart attack.

With parents who died of heart disease, and two brothers who suffer from heart problems, Yoda decided to get involved with the Heart and Stroke Foundation. He began by getting involved with its fundraising fundraising efforts and later became a board member of the agency network. Guelph Wellington chapter. Now Yoda speaks to groups about the dangers of heart disease and offers his story as an example.

It is a story that has come close to home with me," said

Yoda. "Physiology in heart attack, my wife, I am a doctor, I am a doctor."

February is the Heart and Stroke Foundation's annual Heart Month, which is the organization's largest grassroots fundraising initiative. Volunteers raise money through door-to-door canvassing, online fundraising and other fundraising activities. Large fundraising events organized by the foundation are also held throughout the month.

"Heart Month is really about raising awareness of the disease," said Chris Bart, a senior manager of the foundation.

Guelph Wellington office. "Volunteers are essential with Valentine's Day as the heart theme is a natural fit." Heart first aid is required in many cases of the heart in several cases, partly due to the increase in chronic disease. Canadian Heart and Stroke Foundation report that 60 per cent of adults over the age of 35 in Canada are overweight or obese.

"Many young people do not realize that they can be part of the first generation who will pass away before their parents," said Bart. "I am starting to hear more and more stories of people under 30 having heart attacks."

It's true: We can't handle the tooth

By MICHEL MULLIN

Before I take my seat in the theatre, I make sure I get an additional bag of popcorn. I not here and popcorn belongs in the lobby. I say this in a few breaths of awe on the way for their movie to start. Then I head to the theatre to find a seat. I need not be worried.

It was really odd seeing every seat empty. But as the movie progressed, I began to understand why not one single person better than me and I went specifically for the purpose of writing this column: most out of his or her way to watch it.

Denver Johnson (The Mighty Johnson, Walking Tall) recently known as The Rock plays Derek Thompson, a hard-nosed hockey player whose big hits and aggressive moves on the ice knock the teeth out of his opponents effectively giving him the nickname "The Tooth Fairy." Of the ice, he is trying to win over the heart of his girlfriend, Cindy (Michele Clark), and her two kids, Tina (Dorothy Strain) and Randy (James Whitlock). He likes the kids so long as he doesn't have to spend a lot of time with the older son, who Derek Thompson is only being nice to them to impress his mom. He doesn't do too badly, said to make me growl over the soft Toes the tooth fairy isn't.

Because of this, he is brought in to his new workplace, Tractor (Stephen Merchant from the British version of The Office) to work for the dairy godmother, Lily (played by Julie Andrews). (Thank it and it's Kuchenschild, who conceals her of food drives, murder of hockey and violence but he can't see his full write of tooth fairy duty. The movie Tractor and Lily can call him anytime and anywhere, and he has to simply so matter what the situation as they still members work to his spouse.

Movie Review

But you can't do the job without gadgets to go along with you to every house. For that here and to meet with Jerry, played by Billy Crystal (Honey, We Shrunk Ourselves), the film, especially of Q. E. Jones Bond as MI 6.

But Derek doesn't get any finer cars or weapons, he's in a full-on movie about a game, attack game and someone else before going through things like where he knows about flying object avoidance.

The thought of having someone like Johnson turn into a tooth fairy is a terrible idea. The fact I can't say that about the rest of the movie.

When I go to see a movie, calling it a comedy or even a romance comedy, I expect to laugh.

Thompson's work. The reason there are no movie video game people in the world is because they're all hanging on to a bunch of what-ifs.

How right? What if this movie was good? Well, it'd be huge.

The script is full of comic plots that just don't work. In one part Thompson is trying to figure out how to be a tooth fairy, and he says, "I guess I'll just wing it."

Am you kidding? There are professional writers.

Needless to say I was quite disappointed with the movie as a whole. Normally we'd be able to make up with it, but we see no good thing in it, but that movie has no redeeming qualities at all.

As a matter of fact, I think the last comment made by the writers just before they began writing on the script was "I guess we'll just wing it."

I cannot in good conscience give this movie any more than one out of five stars.

Speed matching makes a difference

by AUSTIN REED

Want to do some good but you just can't find the time to do it? Why not volunteer with The United Way at Volunteer Match? The United Way at Volunteer Match has a way for you to find out about opportunities through an old civic duty service.

Volunteer Match is something to set up just like speed dating, but the classic one-on-one opportunities that are making volunteers at a recent event. They professionals were grouped into three tables and find the time to do it, controls on different roles and opportunities. The donors met for three to five minutes with 15-20 different organizations to get knowledge and ask any questions that they had. They then were given a card to come down tomorrow when they were matched to volunteering.

"It's a good event to attend," said Paula Smith, a community relations co-ordinator at United Way. "Even if you don't find a place to volunteer at right away, you are still learning about 20 different organizations that you may not have known about before."

That is the third speed-matching event that the United Way has run, the second for busy working professionals.

"We can use the high school students as well as they could find positions for their community service," said Smith.

The last event took place Feb. 14 at the Flying Dog

Restaurant, where organizations such as the Eastern Public Library, Redfish YMCA and the Redwood Valley Shutter spent with potential volunteers.

"We gave the organizations information on each tabled out as well," said Smith. "So even if the individual was aware of that organization, they can still be contacted and maybe further the information they received."

The second "date" matches of the potential volunteer and organization meeting to get more information regarding the position and filling out paperwork of the volunteer sign up.

Eat dinner with Vance on Wednesdays

by DANIEL BROWN

Every now and then people make a resolution to be a better person. The most common resolution is to get fit and healthy. If you are one of the few who intend to stick up on your "good" those are a few interesting stories who can help keep you motivated.

Vance Tuckerson, a second-year student volunteer student, is promoting healthy living this year as part of his co-op. One of the ways he is doing this is by starting a "Wish to Dinner With Vance" program, during which you can either walk with Vance and donate to the United Way or dine at the Ministry of Health for a healthy meal.

"It's just trying to promote healthy living by giving students a healthy dinner," said Vance. "I'm going to try to get a different meal planned every week to add some variety."

Every Wednesday you can either walk with Vance and donate to the Ministry of Health or eat at the Ministry at 5 p.m. Some of the meals you can expect are spaghetti and marinara, lasagna and shepherd's pie.

If you would like to participate and enjoy a great meal with friends you can walk Vance's Foodbank page and record his Walk to Hunger with Vance.

Housekeeping staff praised for job well done

The Feb. 5 issue of Spice featured an article about students involved with housekeeping (written by Michael Simmer).

I wanted to provide praise for the recognition shared in Spice for the tremendous housekeeping staff who work tirelessly to keep providing a college community that is clean, welcoming and smiling for all.

So often we don't share enough recognition of those who work so hard "behind-the-scenes" in providing a clean and healthy environment that many of us are so proud to consider our second home at Conestoga College.

The positive interaction I have on a day-to-day basis with the housekeeping team also makes me feel encouraged to know that they also consider this their second home.

Never should we underestimate the roles that each of us play toward making a positive college community. I encourage everyone to take the time to share their appreciation with the great housekeeping team for all that they do to help make our campus a kind of community we're proud to be a part of.

Thank you, housekeeping, for being the difference!

Exploring a giant colon fun and educational

By NIKOLA FRANK

People of all ages had fun walking through a giant 12 metre long colon at Warden Town Square on Feb. 3 and 4 and were educated about colon cancer and prevention at the same time.

According to the Canadian Cancer Society, approximately 1 in 8 men and 1 in 10 women will develop colorectal cancer in their lives. Colorectal cancer is the second leading cause of cancer death in Canada. Colorectal cancer is the highest rate of cancer seen in those with regular screening, there is a 90 per cent chance it can be cured.

In 2009, the marketing co-ordinator for the Warden Town Square Regional Cancer Program said, "10,000 people saw the exhibit on Feb. 3 and thousands more came on Feb. 4."

"I was shocked how many people showed up on Super Bowl Sunday," Kruer said. Dr. Stephen Wilson, regional primary care lead for the Warden Town Square Regional Cancer Program, said colon cancer is the most deadly cancer among men under 65. It's more difficult to detect because there are rarely symptoms during the first stages.

Colon cancer is the second source of all other cancers, Wilson said.

She added that some people might be embarrassed to get tested for colon cancer, but there is a test that can be taken at home. The home screening test called a Faecal Occult Blood Test is available from family physicians or at walk-in clinics. The home test requires two small samples of stool as often different days, which are then mailed in a postage-paid envelope for laboratory analysis. If tests for blood in the stool, which can be a sign of colon cancer.

"It's not that often that you can send your map to the government," Wilson jokingly said.

The Canadian Cancer Society stands by asking a healthy diet, leading an active lifestyle, not smoking and not drinking alcoholic beverages on medications to reduce the risk of any type of cancer.

People of all ages entered the giant colon at Warden Town Square on Feb. 3.

Paul Miller was diagnosed with colon cancer five years ago. He was so grateful that he got tested when he did.

"I don't know where I would be if I didn't get tested when I did and it's scary now," Miller said.

How's March 17, 2010?

HERE'S HOW IT WORKS

First, sign up at cca-ontario.org/contest and choose your level of difficulty for the contest by Tuesday, March 16, 2010. On Wednesday, March 17, 2010, sign by 5 p.m.

The contest will begin promptly at 4 p.m. (on that same day) and lasts one hour.

Play fully is restricted to students currently enrolled at an Ontario university or college.

CHOOSE YOUR LEVEL

Sign line and registered students choose between two levels of difficulty: both levels offer cash and scholarship prizes. See A Rewarding Experience for details. Choose your level carefully - the challenge could earn you cash and a scholarship (that is, a real chance of winning in the contest) or not.
